

Abnormal Working Conditions for Workers' Comp Cases

For the case of Washington v. Workers' Compensation Appeal Board (State Police), the Court upheld the denial of a mental/mental claim, because photographing infant murder victims is not an abnormal working condition. The claimant admitted during his testimony that photographing such subjects was a foreseeable part of his job as a photographer for the State Police.